Question from Joe Salmon

Since 19 June 2025 an unauthorised encampment of six caravans has remained on Redhill Park (Bournemouth) despite:

- a Section 77 notice served by BCP Council,
- multiple reports of criminal damage, faecal waste, and vehicle-related antisocial behaviour (Dorset Police ref 55250088667), and
- public expectation—based on previous encampments—that Section 61 powers would be used once that evidence was available.

How is the Police & Crime Commissioner holding the Chief Constable to account for delivering Priority 5 when an encampment remains in situ for several days after the statutory test for Section 61 appears to have been met?

In particular:

- 1) What performance measures (e.g. response times, use-of-powers statistics, victim-satisfaction data) does the PCC monitor to assure himself that Dorset Police are protecting communities from the impact of unauthorised encampments?
- 2) What assurance can residents expect that lessons from Redhill Park will translate into quicker, evidence-based decision-making at future encampments?

I appreciate those operational decisions rest with the Chief Constable; the question concerns the PCC's oversight and the wider delivery of Priority 5.
